Assessment Update: Dr. Hill provided an overview of the changes in assessment practices being piloted at U-High. Twenty teachers are piloting a new assessment process designed to more accurately evaluate what students know. The new assessment program is based on the work of nationally recognized educator Rick Wormeli. The primary emphasis is on assessing mastery of content and providing students with multiple opportunities to demonstrate such mastery. While homework and effort are important to student success – and therefore will continue to be cultivated – a variety of formative and summative assessments are key to determining actual mastery of content. Feedback from staff, test results, and grade reports will be used to evaluate this shift to a standards based grading approach. Dr. Hill indicated that U-High will maintain its current “A,B,C” approach to grade reporting. While feedback on the new approach to assessment has been positive, the CAC felt that additional information would be helpful to students and parents.
